

EXPERIENCE WITH MASAI SCHOOL

Being an engineering graduate from the electronics and telecommunication branch, I always had a desire to have a corporate life in the IT industry rather than the core electronics things. Because of my interest in software kinds of stuff, I always preferred to do a career in the tech industry. So after my graduation, I was already preparing for the frontend technologies like HTML and CSS. I was just preparing without having any planning. So while just scrolling on Instagram, I got to know about the Masai school. I checked the website and noticed the technology stack they are providing and the timing of the whole day was totally interesting, so we should be engaged in just doing our work that will lead to achieving the dream.

So after getting interested, I gave the MSAT but failed on the first attempt. I tried it again with the proper preparation and then I got succeed. Then I got interviewed and got admitted to the full stack web developer course. As the days were passing I was so excited to start the actual curriculum. Some days after, the routine was started. In the start, it was quite hard to attend the sessions for the whole day attentively but after two or three weeks it's been so easy. Now I got the plan and the platform to do my things as I planned. And I started to enjoy the process.

Masai School is very helpful for the students who are very ambitious, dedicated about the thing they dreamt about. So it is just like a helping hand for the ones who lost their path or to change the path. After getting into the institution I developed my technical skills as well as soft skills and still the process is going on as this is holistic development and the continuous process to be adopted by everyone. So that was the journey with Masai School till now. Thank You!
